Two interpretations of the integrated desk, designed to create a dedicated workspace within the home while maintaining continuity with the overall interior design. Poly by Caccaro, for example, is integrated into the full-height Architype wall panelling and positioned alongside an illuminated bookcase. The worktop blends seamlessly into the composition, enhanced by the Natural Wood finish, whose vertical grain becomes a defining design feature and ensures aesthetic consistency across the different areas. The result is a coordinated system in which desk, bookcase and wall panelling work together to organise the space with a sense of order and visual lightness. On the opposite page, Kali by Arredo3 connects the kitchen and living area through a composition that alternates the dark, matt surfaces of the tall units with the warmth of the Canapa Oak laminate wall panelling, characterised by continuous horizontal grain. Set into the niche between the storage modules, the suspended worktop creates a discreet, well-integrated corner for working from home. The combination of closed volumes and open surfaces allows different functions to coexist within a single furnishing system.
